Arizona Must Protect Families—Starting with Accountability for Family Court-Appointed Fraud

Arizona's family court system is failing its most vulnerable. When evidence is ignored and children are endangered, silence is complicity. ENOUGH IS ENOUGH. Share this. Demand accountability. Protect Arizona's children.

Arizona's family court system is in crisis. For years, parents have pleaded for transparency, fairness, and protection for their children. Instead, they've been met with silence, retaliation, and decisions that defy both logic and law. The result? Families torn apart, children placed in harm's way, and constitutional rights trampled in broad daylight.

At the center of this growing scandal is Kristyn Alcott, founder of Family First Forensic Consultants Alcott has been appointed in dozens—possibly hundreds—of family court cases across Arizona, despite having no professional license to provide therapeutic services, evaluate custody, or act in any legal capacity. She has signed affidavits, court reports, and incorporation documents using titles she does not legally hold. That's not just unethical—it's fraud. And it's happening inside Arizona's courtrooms.

The State Knew—and Did Nothing

Arizona's leadership—including Governor Katie Hobbs and Attorney General Kris Mayes—has been repeatedly informed of Alcott's conduct. Lawmakers have heard emotional testimony from parents whose lives were upended by her involvement. Investigative journalists have published daming reports. Former employees have come forward. And still, Alcott remains empowered—appointed by judges, paid by families, and protected by silence.

This is not a clerical error. It's a systemic betrayal. And it violates the constitutional rights of every parent and child affected.

Fraud, Perjury, and Abuse of Power

Alcott has testified under oath. She has submitted recommendations that function as court orders. She has charged families thousands of dollars for services she is not legally authorized to provide. Her own children have reportedly required court intervention and refused to live with her. A video circulating online appears to show her assaulting her son—whom she later sent away.

How is someone unable to manage her own household allowed to evaluate others?
Even more disturbing, photos of lingerie clad Alcott —submitted by her to online MILF contests —have surfaced as legal exhibits in multiple family court cases. In any legitimate child welfare system, that alone would end her career. Instantly.

But in Arizona’s courts? It’s just another day.

Constitutional Rights Are Not Optional

Every parent has the right to due process. Every child has the right to safety. And every family has the right to be evaluated by licensed, qualified professionals—not self-appointed actors operating outside the law.

Arizona’s continued use of unlicensed consultants like Alcott is a direct violation of those rights. It’s fraud on the court. It’s consumer fraud. And it’s a breach of public trust. Arizona's liability here is clear.

What Must Happen Now

The first step in restoring integrity to Arizona’s family court system is removing bad actors and holding them accountable including Alcott. That includes:

- A full review of every case involving Kristyn Alcott
- Criminal investigation into her conduct and intentional misrepresentation of her credentials
- Accountability for judges and officials who enabled her
- Legislative reform to enforce credentialing standards
- Protection for whistleblowers and affected families

Arizona must choose: protect its children and uphold the Constitution—or continue enabling fraud and abuse.

The time for silence is over. The time for accountability is now and Arizona's families are demanding justice.
